Verbal Description

A mano fragment, of vesicular basalt with a slightly-off-oval cross section. There is no lateral/end to end taper, so this view will not be drawn. One end clearly was broken in antiquity, but the sharp edges appear slightly rounded and worn down. The other end was finished, but is poorly finished and rough compared to most manos. The flatter side is worn and smooth ~~over~~ <sup>virtually</sup> over its whole surface. There is less wear on one edge of it -- was the mano pushed with the more worn edge towards the worker? The ~~other~~ rest of the sides are slightly smoothed and ground.
